OVERVIEW

Emily Taylor (Liebman) is an associate in Maslon's Litigation Group who represents clients in construction, insurance recovery, and product liability cases, as well as internal investigations and compliance issues.

In her construction work, Emily represents businesses in contract disputes and other disputes arising out of construction projects through mediation, arbitration, and court litigation. Her work on behalf of insurance policyholders includes best positioning her clients to obtain coverage, responding to coverage denials, representing policyholders in disputes against their insurance brokers, and consulting on many different types of insurance policies, from general liability policies to life insurance policies. Emily has also assisted in high-stakes product liability litigation, corporate internal investigations, and issues related to state and federal compliance.

In her prior roles as a prosecutor in both the Hennepin County and Ramsey County Attorney's offices, Emily gained valuable experience first-chairing numerous felony jury trials, managing large case dockets, litigating pretrial motions, and negotiating pleas. As an assistant county attorney, she prosecuted various felonies, including drug prosecutions, property crimes, gun crimes, sexual assaults, and homicide cases, with some cases garnering significant media attention. In the trial division in Ramsey County, her most recent role, she also served as the office's DNA evidence liaison for felony prosecutions. In Hennepin County, she served as a member of the county's joint task force on reducing barriers to housing stability.

While in law school at the University of Wisconsin, Emily worked as a summer law clerk in the U.S. Attorney's Office for the District of Minnesota, assisting in civil cases and felony prosecutions. She also participated in moot court as a competitor, coach, and executive board membership chair and competed on the mock trial team. In addition, she mentored high school students and served as vice president of community service for the Jewish Law Students Association.
